Not illustrated. 1832 Excerpt: .said I, that any would be found to object to the second process Sir Henry described. The shepherd, striving in vain to win his way against the snow storm on the uplands, in search of his perishing flock, would surely bless the hand that planted woods to shelter his charge? Even he, said my father, would pluck up every sapling if he dared, for shepherds are well known to grudge every foot of soil on which their flock cannot browse. Observe the fact, said Sir Henry. Are not my pheasants lampooned before they are hatched? Is not every larch in all these acres looked upon as a meal taken from a half-starved cow? When the shepherd finds his flock safe under the shelter of a full-grown wood, he will be reconciled to the planter; and not till then: and if any one of my neighbors should live to rest his aged form on his staff in the noonday sun, and watch his grandchildren, among a hundred laborers, felling wood on this spot, he may look on my grave as he creeps homewards, and sigh to think how he once misunderstood my intentions; but I must not expect this justice in my life-time. You may, replied my father; and if you are spared to a good old age, you will witness as total a change in the views of our discontented neighbors as in the aspect of this waste or the condition of our village. Sir Henry pointed...
