As a matter of fact, the United States census of manufactures for 1914, the latest report available, shows that there is practically twice as much capital invested in manufacturing industries in Louisville as in Birmingham. It is also interesting to note that this same census which reported $89,957,000 invested in manufacturing establishments in Louisville, showed that in the matter of capital invested Louisville in 1914 was a more important manufacturing center than other cities of between 200,000 and 300,000 population such as Kansas City, Indianapolis, St. Paul, Denver, Portland and Columbus. Louisville also showed better than all of the cities named, with the exception of Indianapolis, in number of persons engaged in manufactures, in salaries and wages paid, in cost of materials used, in value of products and primary horse power. The chief industries of Louisville are the manufacture of agricultural implements and wagons, bar iron, enameled bath tubs and brass and iron plumbers supplies, staves and castings, clothing, leather, woolen goods and yarn, fertilizers, harness and saddles, refined vegetable oils and soap, flour, vinegar and pickles, lumber and boxes, structural iron, tobacco, furniture, terra cotta, and tile, white lead and paints, wire goods, boilers and ice machines, whiskey, packing house products, machinery, woodenware and brooms, cooperage. Louisville, however, has not been satisfied with its development during the past decade. The feeling prevails among citizens that it has lagged somewhat in industrial growth. As a consequence last July, several months following the consolidation...
